More than health and fitness: YWCA Aquatics programming is deeply rooted in history.

In the 1950's there were two branches of the YWCA in Asheville: a white branch and a black branch. The white branch was located on the east side of the city, and the black branch was located on the west side. The white branch was a well-funded and well-maintained facility, while the black branch was a small, dilapidated building. The black branch was the only place where Black people could swim in Asheville. The white branch was a place where white people could swim, but Black people were not allowed. This was a time of segregation, and the YWCA was one of the few places where Black people could swim. The black branch was a place where Black people could learn to swim, and it was a place where they could feel safe and welcome. The black branch was a place where Black people could learn to swim, and it was a place where they could feel safe and welcome. The black branch was a place where Black people could learn to swim, and it was a place where they could feel safe and welcome.
